Chopin's First Editions Online (CFEO) is a research project of three years' duration, running from 1 March 2004 to 28 February 2007. It is directed by Professor John Rink (Royal Holloway, University of London), in conjunction with Dr Marilyn Deegan and Mr Harold Short (King's College London), and run in collaboration with Research Assistants Dr Christophe Grabowski and Dr Danae Stefanou (Royal Holloway, University of London). The project is being funded by the Arts and Humanities Research Board within its Resource Enhancement Programme.

The project will create an online resource uniting all of Chopin's first editions in an unprecedented virtual collection. The archive will be drawn from four partner libraries (Bibliothèque Nationale de France, Bodleian Library, British Library, and Chopin Society Warsaw) and eighteen other institutions, totalling c.5,000 digital images of Chopin's music. The full score of each first impression will appear along with commentary on particularly significant textual features. In addition, there will be excerpts from the Annotated Catalogue of Chopin's First Editions. Innovative methodologies for complex textual interlinking and web delivery of this material will be devised at the Centre for Computing in the Humanities (CCH) using advanced imaging techniques allied with relevant open standards for metadata and interface design.

For further details, contact Dr Danae Stefanou, CFEO Research Assistant (D.M.Stefanou@rhul.ac.uk), Department of Music, Royal Holloway, University of London, Surrey TW20 0EX.

About us

Home

The Keyword Project is a pilot study funded by the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation to investigate the use of computational linguistics in the extraction of keywords from digital library content. The Project grew out of work done jointly by the Refugee Studies Centre, Queen Elizabeth House, Oxford University, and the Centre for Computing in the Humanities at King's College London in the development of the Forced Migration Online digital library and portal.

A great deal of progress has been made in automating the capture of full text from printed documents by the production scanning of print originals or surrogates followed by the application of advanced optical character recognition (OCR) algorithms. Once text is produced, there are also sophisticated systems for full-text search using pattern matching or fuzzy matching which offer excellent retrieval. However, the use of bibliographic descriptions, the addition of keywords to a document and the application of other taxonomic devices are still needed to improve precision and recall, and these meta activities generally still need a great deal of human time, effort and skill. See Project details.

This project has investigated a number of different statistical and computation techniques, commercial and academic, and has done some testing of data from the Forced Migration Online digital library. See our workshop report and publication for further details.

6.1 Motivations and objectives

It is clear from the results of this study that the level of revenue raised by museums through imaging and rights is small relative to the overall revenue earning capacity of the museum from retail, ticket sales, membership and fundraising. A museum does not carry out image creation or rights and reproduction activity because of its profitability. These services exist because of the internal need for image creation and rights clearance matching up with an external desire to publish and use museum images. The need to promote the museum collections, to gain appropriate credit and to honour the artist and their work are the real driving factors that underlie these services.

Most of these services are sunk costs to their museums that exist on budgets set according to the internal need for services and augmented with some external commercial and non-profit based usage. There are notable exceptions, but these museums do not represent the norm found in the survey or the interviews; and even here the success of the rights revenue is often based upon a small number (between 10 and 50) works which are iconic either to art history or the public sensibility.

The main financial goal of all the services interviewed is to make enough money to offset direct and visible costs like materials and new photography. However tempting it is for museums to look upon colleagues with 6 figure revenues with envy this would be a mistake. All those interviewed were spending as much or more money to provide services as they received in Anchorite	Someone who had spent a period of probation in a monastery and had received the permission of his abbo become a solitary. In the early Anglo-Saxon period an anchorite was held to be of high status within the church.

Army	This translates the Latin word exercitus. It was sometimes used in Asser's Life of Alfred to represent the C English here, usually with a qualifying word such as paganorum 'of pagans' to indicate that Asser was ref to the vikings. In Æthelweard's Chronicle the word is used for both Old English here and fierd .
Æscmann	Old English æsc 'an ash tree' became by extension something made of ash wood and hence 'a ship'. The

2005-03-04: ALA 2004 Final Launched

Today we launched the final version of ALA 2004 with its new URL http://insaph.kcl.ac.uk/ala2004/. From now on, only minor, non-content-bearing corrections will be added—until a new edition is released at some point in the future. This includes a ht:/dig text-only search engine for the ALA 2004 site. The free text search allows you to choose your own search terms, but it will not take advantage of the marked up expressions. It is not yet possible to search for Greek words, which are however fully indexed.
